George A. Cary, a manufacturer of No. 9 Desbronses street, told Magis-trate Levy that he was about to board Fall River liner for a vacation.

As he walked through Barciay street, grip in one hand and an umbrella in the other, he was approached by Russo, who asked if he wanted his baggage carried. When he answered "no," he alleges, Russo tore his watch charm from the chain and run, Cary followed him through Barclay street, down Greenwich, and thence east on Fulton, screaming "stop thief" as loud as he could. As Rueso ran through Fulton street, he was pursued and cap-tured by Sargeant O'Keefe.

Accused of Cruelty to Boys. The parents of George Charlton, and fourteen, of No. 179 Herkimer street, Brooklyn, charged Thomas Walsh, a reputed well-to-do livery table keeper of No. 1295 Atlantic avenue. Brooklyn, in the Gates Avenue Court to-day with having besten their son and handled him so roughly that the boy's arm was broken and may be permanently injured. The charge against Walsh grow out of a schoolboy quarrel between young Charlton and Walsh's son, who is the same age Chariton's father told Magistrate Voorbles that about a week ago his son was passing Welsh's stable, when Waish pounced out on him, threw him to the ground and twisted his arm till he broke it. Walsh at the time is re-ported to have said that he did it be-cause Chariton had held young Walsh while another boy beat the Hyery man's water dandruff and itching and said he had never laid a finger on Chariton's son, but the Magistrate held him in bonds of $1,000 on a charge of assault. According to Chariton's parents and the said from the said the sai
